Sam the Sloth was hanging from a tree in the forest.
As Sam hung, he thought about all the snacks he might eat that day.

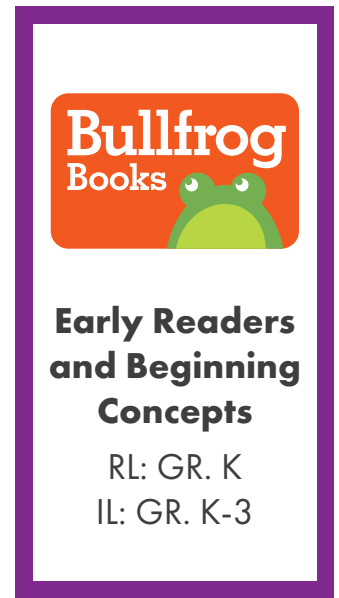

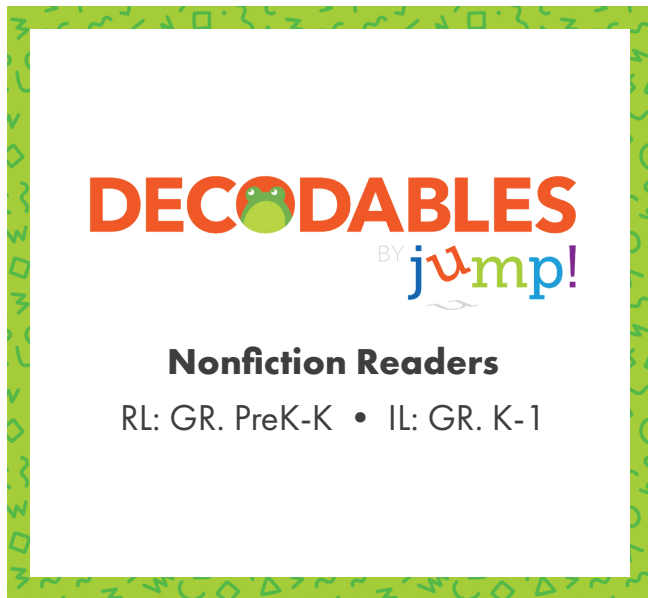

It was Sam's birthday. For Sam, the best way to spend a birthday was chilling out in the trees and munching on food.

A DAY IN THE LIFE

ICE FISHING

Ice fishing is a popular pastime in cold climates. Anglers venture out onto frozen lakes and drill holes into the ice. Trout, yellow perch, walleye, and pike are some of the species people fish for when out on the ice. This is what a day of ice fishing looks like:

- Before they plan their trip, the fisherman always checks to make sure the ice is safe to walk on. There has to be at least 4 inches (10.2 centimeters) of clear or black ice to safely step onto the frozen lake.
- A day of ice fishing usually starts before the sun rises. Setting up takes time and the fisherman wants to make sure they have all of their gear with them, including a pole and bait.
- The fisherman will need to drill a hole in the ice. The time it takes to finish the hole will depend on the thickness of the ice and the equipment being used. The machine used to drill the hole is called an auger.
- Ice fishing poles are shorter than other poles. The most common way to ice fish is with a technique called jigging. This involves dropping the line in the water, lifting the bait up, and then dropping it back down. This attracts the fish.
- A day on the ice can be long and cold. It's important that the fisherman dresses for warmth and comfort. Nothing spoils an ice fishing trip more than the shivers.

DID YOU KNOW? An ice shanty is a temporary shelter that anglers put up around their ice fishing hole. It keeps them sheltered from the wind and cold.

"Hello?" I called. My voice felt shaky and unsure. "Anybody in here?"
I took another step. The running water sound was definitely in there. I carefully made my way to the bathroom. The light was on inside.

"You left the water on," I said, which seemed dumb. I think I would have been scared if a real person said, "Oh, I'm sorry." Especially since my dad, Olive, and I were the only ones there. Or were we?

I stepped into the bathroom. The sink faucet was running hot water. Steam was rising from the sink and fogging the mirror. As I stood there, I saw letters forming in the steam. It was like someone was writing a message with their finger. Right before my eyes.

I stood there frozen as each letter formed.
It said: leave us alone
I covered my mouth to stop from screaming.

The chairlift finally reached the top of the hill. The kids hopped off and skated out of the way. "Remember the first time you got off the chairlift with your snowboard?" Asher asked. He lowered his goggles and adjusted his helmet. "And you totally ate snow?"

"Remember the first time we raced on boards?" Marci countered, sticking her tongue out at her friend. "I totally won. Didn't you fall down too?"

Asher grinned. "Yup. Almost hit a tree."

After a quick stop to adjust their bindings, Marci and Asher were off. Their boards slid smoothly over the freshly groomed snow. Marci breathed in the crisp winter air. Then she crouched low. She swooped around a surprised Asher.

"See you at the bottom," she called to him with a grin. "I'll be waiting. Try not to fall this time."

The Pixel Portal

"OH! OH!" said the man in a strange electronic voice as they collided. The man somersaulted and crashed to the floor.

"I'm so sorry! Are you okay?" cried Max. But before Max could help him back to his feet, the man jumped up, spun around, and disintegrated into thousands of tiny pixels. As Max watched the pixels fly off, he got the feeling he'd done something very bad.

"What in the name of Davy Crockett do you think you're doin'?" someone shouted in a cowboy drawl.

Max turned to see a huge-bellied man wearing a white chef's hat. The man was eyeing Max like a hungry vulture. He had an enormous brown, bushy beard. "Thanks to you, my waiter is chawin' gravel!"

"Chawin' what? Sorry?"

"Gravel! Didn't ya hear me?" barked the man.

Max was sure he recognized the man from somewhere. He just couldn't figure out exactly where.

"I'm s-so s-sorry, mister,"

Chapter Twelve
POWER UP!

Grandpa rushed back into the workshop. His feet danced with excitement and so did his eyes. Max had never seen him like this before.

After putting on a white lab coat, Grandpa rushed around, switching on cobweb-covered lights. He whipped a dust sheet off an ancient control panel, then began flicking switches. He dug into a huge storage container full of junk.

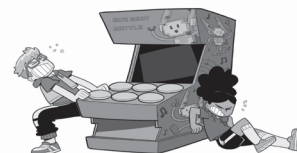

He yanked out something that looked like a cross between a kitchen whisk and a ray gun. "AH-HAAAAA!" Max and Jade followed Grandpa to the back wall. Grandpa pointed his whisk at the spot where the portal had opened, then turned a switch. The whisk whirled, making a noise like a coffee grinder.

"Exactly as I thought!" he exclaimed. "The portal might be gone, but it has left some energy behind." He rushed over to one of the big arcade games in the middle of the floor. Jade and Max helped him push the game away from its spot. Underneath was a floor hatch, which Grandpa flung open. "HA HAAAAA!"

A loud BEEP! BEEP! BEEP! interrupted Rafa's thoughts.

"Stowaway alert! Stowaway alert!" said a robotic voice. It came from dWown by Rafa's knees.

Rafa groaned. The cybots had found him. Again.

"All cybots to the Hyper Zone balcony. Remove Fugitive 404!" the little cybot at Rafa's feet wailed.

I took Maggie back to the police station. I had some more questions to ask her. Clearly, she wasn't the brains of the operation. If she was, then that window had made sure she wouldn't have the brains for another.

My gut said there was someone else involved. It also said it was nearly time for lunch.

Misha's voice sounded muffled and far away. There was no hope of explaining what had just happened. Meg would have to figure it out herself.

She looked out over the strange world she had found herself in. The grass was tennis ball yellow. The dinosaurs that grazed the slopes looked odd. Odd in a squishy, rubbery kind of way.

Meg went to investigate.
